The UCM

The Complutense University of Madrid (UCM) is the largest university in Spain and one of the most prestigious in Europe.

Its teaching and research centers are mainly on the Moncloa Campus, in the “Ciudad Universitaria”, and on the Somosaguas Campus. There are also some other buildings in the centre of Madrid.

The UCM is strategically located in Spain’s capital city, and is easy to reach from anywhere in the Community of Madrid by metro, bus and commuter train and cycle lane. In addition with links between the two campuses.

Moncloa Campus. Campus of International Excellence

In december 2009 Spain's Ministry of Education recognized the Complutense University of Madrid (UCM) and the Technical University of Madrid (UPM) as partners in an International Campus of Excellence, Moncloa Campus.

The Moncloa Campus Project identifies six thematic clusters: Global change and new energies; Materials for the future; AgriFood and health; Innovation in health; Heritage and Sustainable mobility.

Five Centuries of History

The Complutense University of Madrid traces its origins to the Estudio de Escuelas Generales de Alcalá, founded by King Sancho IV of Castile in 1293.

1499: Cardinal Cisneros founds the “Complutum”, the predecessor of today’s university, in the town of Alcalá de Henares.

1509: The University has five faculties.

1836: Under the reign of Isabel II, the university is moved to Madrid where it took the name Universidad Central.

1927: Construction begins on the Moncloa campus on land granted by King Alfonso XIII.

1970: The Central University is renamed the Complutense and the Somosaguas Campus is created.

2013: The Complutense University is now the largest university in Madrid and one of the most important universities in Spain and in Europe.
