

Master in Research in Journalism: Discourse and Communication

Code Titration of Ministry of Education of Spain 4311866	Programme Requirements	Stated Objectives Associated	General Competences	Specific Competences
Code Titration of Complutense University of Madrid 0636	Acquiring experience in different discursive fields of Journalism, of great relevance both for research and for communication companies	Acquiring expert knowledge of the discursive structures of journalistic communication	Integrate knowledge acquired, confronting the complexity and demonstrate the ability to make judgments on social and ethical responsibilities of the communicative practice of Journalism and the social debates generated	Ability to analyze, research and creation of new narrative models in journalistic communication and their adaptation to different media and communication models
Number of Places: 120	Acquiring skills to clearly communicate their knowledge, conclusions and results of research in front of audiences specialized and non-specialized	Conceive, design and develop an original and coherent research project	Ability to observe phenomena and problems, to express ideas and formulate hypotheses, to create a corpus of theory based on the analysis and synthesis of other studies and theories, to develop appropriate research methodologies and to reach clear and precise conclusions to contribute to the advancement of knowledge in any phenomenological scope of Journalism and Communication	Ability to situate the processes and communication phenomena to be investigated in the corresponding potential levels of causes and possible effects
Language Is Taught: Spanish		Promote the creativity and innovation in studies and researches on journalistic communication	Aptitude for ideation and development of research projects adapted to the communicative and discursive context of Journalism, as well as phenomenological observations of journalistic communication	Capacity for analysis of contemporary social movements, strategies and organizational forms, their collective identities and relations with the media and its social projection
				Knowing the discursive and argumentative rhetoric for apply to text analysis, interpretation and opinion
				Capacity for analysis and processing of statistical data and databases with software tools and other appropriate research methods for finding social, political and cultural theming and interpretation.
				Capacity for the creation and drafting of original and relevant research, with appropriate methodology and establishment of relevant findings in the field of knowledge of the Communication and the Journalism and its public defense.