Conferencia a cargo de:

ANNA DI RONCO

(LM, PhD) Senior Lecturer. Directora del Centro de Criminología. Departamento de Sociología. University of Essex (UK)

«FLEXING THE MUSCLES OF POWER: Policing Urban Environmental Activism During the Pandemic»

This presentation focuses on the policing of environmental activists during the COVID-19 pandemic. It draws on a 10-month ethnography in the city of Trento (Italy), formal and informal interviews and focus groups with activists, a visual ethnography of social media posts by two selected eco-justice movements, and informal conversations with police officers in charge of public order in the city. The presentation ultimately aims to illustrate what changed in the policing of activism during the pandemic and explains these changes through critical criminological perspectives on eco-justice resistance and its social control
