

EDITORIAL POLICY OF THE COLLECTION

LINGUISTICS AND COMMUNICATION

Theme and Scope

Introduction

The Linguistics and Communication Collection arose in 2020 for the purpose of providing Ediciones Complutense with a space dedicated to the fields of linguistics and communication within the framework of an ambitious academic editorial project of scientific relevance promoted by one of the most important academic institutions in Spain. The collection seeks to offer studies of linguistics and communication, fields in which Universidad Complutense holds a position of particular renown as demonstrated by international indicators on scientific quality and production at universities around the world. These indicators show that the study of Humanities and Social Sciences at Universidad Complutense de Madrid is of outstanding calibre, highlighting the quality of research and teaching in these fields. It is particularly worth noting the linguistic study of both modern languages (Spanish, English, German, French, Italian, Portuguese, Catalan, Basque, Russian, Polish, Arabic) and classical languages, fields of research in which our university enjoys national and international prestige of the highest level and in which the diversity of languages and approaches to linguistic studies, both historical and synchronic, is outstanding. As regards the study of communication, our university stands among the leaders in the field of social sciences due to the number of research projects, publications and contracts obtained.

Scope

The collection includes works of proven scientific quality on any topic related to linguistics and communication, and therefore includes research of a monographic nature or general texts that are subject to rigorous and specialised scientific treatment but that may also reach a wider audience, whether that be due to the interest in and current nature of the topics discussed or the innovative nature of the approach adopted or due to the capacity to convey new trends and studies in linguistics and communication. The works may be of single, shared or plural authorship and written in Spanish or English. They may also be written in other languages if the work and target audience require this. The Scientific Committee of the collection will take this factor into consideration.

To consider publication, a minimum of fifty percent of authors of any given project have to belong to universities other than UCM. In the case of collective works, the percentage of internal and external authorship will be calculated.

Objectives

The collection seeks to raise the profile of and help to communicate monographic and general research projects on specific and specialised topics or more general-interest texts from the various areas of the study of linguistics and communication with rigorous, academic, scientific and modern treatment that reflect the fields leading to research and teaching interest in linguistics and communication. With a broad focus, which includes the study of linguistics and its topics and levels of analysis as well as relationships with similar disciplines and, in particular, a focus on the study of communication. The collection aims to communicate scientific production, with a focus on both that developed by the university community as well as the national and international scientific community, either by consolidated specialists or more recent researchers, in order to build up a catalogue capable of serving as a benchmark for trends and contributions from modern research to the various topics of linguistics and the study of communication.

The collection is open to the main lines of research in modern linguistics and communication, supporting already consolidated disciplines as well as the study of new and emerging fields:

Comparative, contrastive and intercultural studies, linguistic typology and diversity, studies on the media and digital media, audiovisual communication, computer mediated communication, language learning and teaching, specialised languages and discourse, study of linguistics and languages about phonetics and phonology, semantics, syntax, pragmatics, historic linguistics, discourse analysis, multimodal communication and media, corpus linguistics, linguistics and technology, interdisciplinarity, cultural linguistics and studies, language and society.

Editorial process

Requests for publication must be made using the official form and will be registered according to their date of arrival, with confirmation of receipt being sent within ten working days. They will subsequently be passed to the Chair of the Collection together with all the other documentation submitted for review at the Scientific Committee under publishing policy criteria, and a decision will be taken within ninety working days from receipt. If the request is rejected, the Editorial Board of Ediciones Complutense will issue the corresponding reasoned report within ninety working days. If it is approved, the author must submit the full text of the work within six months, if not already submitted, in accordance with the publishing guidelines available on the website. Once the full text has been received and subjected to the corresponding anti-plagiarism analysis, it will be reviewed by the technical staff of Ediciones Complutense in order to ensure that it meets the publication rules of the publisher.

The work will then be anonymised and submitted for review and reporting to two specialists of recognised standing in the field with no ties either to the institution to which the author belongs or Universidad Complutense de Madrid, the Editorial Board of Ediciones Complutense and the Scientific Committee of the collection. In the event of a discrepancy, the opinion of a third reviewer will be taken into consideration. The reviewers will be proposed by the Scientific Committee of the collection and they must return their reports within thirty working days.

Reviewers and members of the Scientific Committee of the collection and the Editorial Board of Ediciones Complutense must refrain from taking decisions in any of the following situations:

- A direct relationship exists between an author and a reviewer.
- Recent and significant professional collaboration exists between the author and the reviewer.
- The reviewer is collaborating on the work sent to them.
- The reviewer believes they cannot be objective, whether for personal reasons or an interest of a financial nature.

When at least two reports are favourable (publishable / publishable with corrections), the considerations expressed by the external reviewer(s) for inclusion will be sent to the author anonymously.

The Scientific Committee of the collection will issue a reasoned ruling within thirty working days from reception of the reports from the reviewer(s), which it will pass to the Editorial Board of Ediciones Complutense alongside said reports. The latter will adopt a final decision within thirty working days.

If the result is favourable, the author must deliver the declaration of good practice and transfer of rights as a preliminary step before signing the publishing contract. If the original includes figures, photographs, maps, graphics or any other kind of illustration or image, the author must also provide documentary evidence that the same are not subject to rights or that the pertinent reproduction authorisation has been obtained.

The author will be entitled to receive two proofs for correction. The first will be delivered within twenty working days from the date of receipt of the original final manuscript and the second within fifteen working days from the date of receipt of the first corrected proofs. The correction process will consist of checking the proofs against the original and, where appropriate, including any essential last-minute additions, the publication of which is subject to a decision from Ediciones Complutense.

Finally, the book will be published within sixty working days from receipt of the final page proofs corrected by the author.

Editorial criteria

Generally speaking, publication proposals for conference proceedings, project results reports, translations of works that do not include a critical study, facsimile editions, master's dissertations and doctoral dissertations that have not been reformulated for publication will not be accepted.

Submitted works must meet the publication guidelines of the Publisher and fall under the themes of the collection. They must also meet the requirements on originality, scientific interest, relevance to the topic, conceptual and methodological rigour, contribution to knowledge, internal coherence of the text and clear explanations, valid and sound conclusions, and sufficient and up-to-date bibliography.

Works must be submitted alongside the corresponding declarations of authorship and of good practice and transfer of rights, and will be examined by anti-plagiarism software.

If the publication will receive external funding, the author must specify the amount thereof and the name of the partner entity.

Pursuant to Spanish legal regulations, all those works with ethical implications (research in humans or the use of biological samples of human origin, use of human embryonic stem cells or lines taken from them, clinical trials, use of personal data and genetic information, animal experimentation, use of biological agents of risk to human or animal health or the environment, confined use of genetically modified organisms - GMO, release of GMO) must have the corresponding report from the Research Ethics Committee of the corresponding centre for publication, in accordance with Spanish Law 14/2007 (OSG of 4 July 2007), the purposes of which are contained in Article 12.

If the original includes figures, photographs, maps, graphics or any other kind of illustration or image, the author must provide documentary evidence that the same are not subject to rights or that the pertinent reproduction authorisation has been obtained.

For further information, we recommend consulting the sections on instructions for authors.

Original manuscript review systems

The publication proposal will be submitted for preliminary review by the Scientific Committee of the collection according to publishing policy criteria. If approved, the full manuscript must be submitted (if this has not already taken place), which, after the corresponding anti-plagiarism analysis, will be reviewed by the technical staff of Ediciones Complutense in order to ensure that it meets the publication rules of the publisher.

The work will then be anonymised and submitted for review and reporting to two specialists of recognised standing in the field with no ties either to the institution to which the author belongs or Universidad Complutense, the Editorial Board of Ediciones Complutense and the Scientific Committee of the collection. In the event of a discrepancy, the opinion of a third reviewer will be taken into consideration. The reviewers will be proposed by the Scientific Committee of the collection and they must return their reports within thirty working days.

The reviewers will review contributions according to a standard form and must issue an overall rating (Publishable/Publishable with corrections/Not publishable) based on the following aspects:

- Content: originality, scientific interest, relevance to the topic, methodology, conclusions and bibliography.
- Expression and presentation: structure and clarity of the text, conceptual rigour and internal consistency of the text.

For further information, you may consult the sections on instructions for reviewers, original manuscript selection and review process and original manuscript selection diagram.

Terms and conditions for authors on the self-archiving of their work in institutional or themed repositories.

The publishing contracts signed by Ediciones Complutense are governed by the provisions of Royal Legislative Decree 1/1996, of 12 April, Consolidated Text of the Intellectual Property Act.

Generally speaking, the contract will have a duration of ten years from the date on which it is signed and it may be automatically renewed for successive periods of five years provided that neither of the parties duly notifies the other party in writing of its wish to not renew. Upon expiry of the contract on any grounds, Ediciones Complutense will enjoy preferential option rights to republish the work under the same terms and conditions as those that the author may agree with third parties.

Besides the general contract expiry grounds and in terms of publishing matters (reproduction and distribution rights over the work), the contract will expire on the following grounds:

1. Upon expiry of the agreed period.
2. Following the sale of all copies, if this was the publication purpose.
3. Following ten years from the transfer, if remuneration was exclusively agreed as standard pursuant to the provisions of Article 46, Section 2.d, of the Spanish Intellectual Property Act.
4. At any event, at 15 years after Ediciones Complutense has been authorised by the author to reproduce the work.

Upon expiry of the contract and unless provisions exist to the contrary, the publisher may dispose of any copies of the work it possesses within the three following years and in any agreed manner of distribution. The author may purchase said copies at 60% of the retail price or the price determined by an expert, or may opt to exercise their pre-emption right over the retail price. Said disposal will be subject to the terms and conditions established in the expired contract.

The inclusion of published books in institutional or themed repositories must always have prior permission from Ediciones Complutense.
